Ted Grinstead : Poetic Justus: Things That Don't Matter before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Poetic Justus: Things That Don't Matter:

Justus is an alien who has been sent to make observations about life on Earth. He sends daily reports back to his home planet about everything he sees, especially the bizarre behavior of one intelligent species call humans. His analysis is usually VERY confused. Here for the first time is a compilation of his humorous perspectives for Earthlings of all ages. From Dating to Dancing from Toupees to Toilets you will have a smile on your face as this bow-tie wearing alien provides his (mis)interpretation. Enjoy the ridiculous ramblings - that travel through space and time From a visiting alien - who only speaks in silly rhyme His observations about life on Earth quite often leave him with an entire Galaxy of wrong impressions. As you will discover, he appears to be in a perpetual state of bafflement. It is our belief that these postings are being sent to Justus own species on some far away planet. Maybe he is sending them to his boss or to his supreme leader or possibly someone really important - like his girlfriend. His thoughts come from what he sees on Earth after considerable head-scratch musing Earthling behavior is alien to him he finds most of it quite confusing. Oh yeah one more thing The picture of Justus that is shown in this book is a composite based on actual sightings from people here on Earth! We think the red bowtie is some kind of camouflage he wears in an effort to blend in among us and remain completely anonymous.

About the Author Ted Grinstead is a Canadian business owner, sportsman, political junkie and dreamer who enjoys writing about things that dont matter. Born on Leap Year Day and thus forever childish, accepted norms of human behavior are alien to him. He lives with his wife on planet Earth in Ancaster, Ontario.
