You don't have to be a social terrorist or a cigar smoker to laugh your head off as you read about Jack's adventures.

Thirty hilarious chapters, complete with eight illustrations, provide a unique perspective on life, love, politics, cigars, nature, science, the unexplained, cigars, relationships, adventure, economics, and cigars. There is also an occasional reference to cigars. The author details household chore escape techniques, successful Father's Day gift acquisition strategies, relationship tips (for 3rd and 4th marriages), and insight on personal development.

Uproariously funny... A wonderfully delightful collection of essays sure to keep readers in stitches. A totally enjoyable read! -- Sandra Morgan, fictionforest.com, August 16, 2000From the PublisherThis book was written for the man who thinks he knows who he is, and for the woman who eventually intends to tell him otherwise. Humorist/humanist Jack Riepe wades into the politically correct morass, sowing the seeds of satire, sanity, and self-preservation. At first glance, the author appears to focus on cigar smoking as a manly ritual and the basis of life. It quickly becomes apparent, however, that a cigar smoke-screen constitutes the veil through which Riepe interprets the world around him. Some books purport to offer good advice. Others clearly offer bad advice. This one is simply vice, and humor, in its purest form. Not only does Politically Correct Cigar Smoking For Social Terrorists provide invaluable insight, the book is destined to become a collector's treasure after the author's death. Jack Riepe is presently feeling fine, but considering the number of people who'd like to kill him, the value of this investment is virtually guaranteed.About the AuthorBorn in Jersey City and successfully abandoned by his parents after multiple attempts, Jack Riepe was raised by wolves in a national park. He was found by authorities and placed in a foster home run by attorneys for continuity. Riepe now lives in New York's Adirondack Mountains, where he trains fresh-water clams for circus acts. A public relations specialist by day, Riepe has represented leading segments of the transportation lobby since 1979.
