Hejduk Politically Correct Holiday Stories is a collection of several well-known Christmas stories changed to be politically correct. There are a few short ones (like Frosty and Rudolph) and then a long one (A Christmas Carol). They are all written in a sarcastic, over the top PC, way. There are two non-politically correct Christmas stories at the end, one about Santa's childhood and one that was a surprisingly sweet story about a cabbie and possibly talking animals. It's a fun, quick read. I recommend reading it!

By Joan Bohnert This has been such a family favorite that I finally had to give away my copy to a relative who loves reading it in the Christmas season. The copy I bought now is to replace mine. One of my sons said he thought the stories were kind of negative, but you have to approach this with kind of a droll sense of humor. All of the "Politically Correct" stories are really funny, especially if you are "chronologically gifted."

Whether your favorite holiday story is "A Christmas Carol", "The Story of Hanukkah", or "'Twas the Night Before Christmas", you'll find it transformed to reflect current sensibilities in Politically Correct Holiday Stories. Injecting our popular holiday fables with a modern perspective is no easy task, but someone had to do it -- and who better than the proven master of cultural sensitivity? James Finn Garner joyfully frees these holiday tales from sexism, ageism, religious imperialism, and every other sorry vestige of our flawed, low-consciousness past. So gather the family (whether traditional, dysfunctional, co-dependent, or otherwise) around the hearth, and read aloud these tales as they should have been told the first time.

About the Author James Finn Garner is a writer and performer whose last two books, Politically Correct Bedtime Stories and Once Upon A More Enlightened Time, are international bestsellers. Called "a master of the tour de force" by The Washington Post and a "smart-alec, mealy-mouthed creep" by The London Daily Telegraph, Garner feels the truth lies somewhere in between. He lives in Chicago with his wife/lifemate and their pre-adult.
