From Capital Decisions Ltd (2000-03-01) : Puns and Pundits: Word Play in the Hebrew Bible and Ancient Near Eastern Literature (2000-03-01) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Puns and Pundits: Word Play in the Hebrew Bible and Ancient Near Eastern Literature (2000-03-01):

11 of 12 people found the following review helpful. well, it IS more fun than a crick in the groan ...By Luscherfirst let me warn casual readers away : this is not for an interested person outside academia - there must be others works that will scratch this itch, but i am unaware of them (just to save you the time and trouble of asking) - unless you need a sleeping pill in book form. this would be an awful bore for such readersthe lowest form of getting published : an anthology with no text tying the loosely associated, previously published, scholarly papers together. this tome is no exceptionrather than allow readers to think i am dismissing the entire collection, allow me to say that there was an interesting insight into Egyptian Hieroglyphics and what the author termed a "Three Dimensional Pun"the limited number of ancient languages seems a bit of a drawback, given the title, but it may have been too difficult finding papers published in foreign languages (and really, who can be bothered ?) which could have been translated to English for inclusion into this publicationsadly there is no TOC, and any book listed by a publisher without making use of 's "look inside" feature is automatically suspect (as well as those limited to TOC and Index), and given the entrance fee to this show ? doubly so. here are the contents, listed in brief (as the publisher can't be bothered)- Egyptian - Puns and Word Play in Ancient EgyptianMesopotamia Word Play in Sumerian Alliterative Allusions,
