4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Memories of childhood, second book By Josephine Briggs This is the second book about growing up in small town midwest I have read. The stories are wonderful as they are in the first book. Kudos to Jean Tennant for her work of editing these two books of childhood memories. Kudos to these writers for sharing their childhood memories with readers. I enjoyed reading about the young girls love for horses, one of them to go on working as a riding instructor and a Special Olympics coach. Then there is the story of the mischievous billy goat that trapped two young girls in the outhouse, the girl who worked as a maid for wealthy people and felt so lucky to go to the Chautauqua. There were snowball fights and mushroom hunts. These are stories of the joy of just being alive. Every story, every memory of childhood is wonderful. So keep up the good writing writers, keep up the good editing Mrs Tennant. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Very well written! Reminded me of my childhood. Inside these pages you'll find thirty heartwarming, funny and dramatic stories about life in the Midwest, ranging from the days after the Depression to the more recent past. Stories such as "Cyrano the Pig" and "The Great Snowman War of 1952" will have you laughing out loud, while "Stars in the Window" will bring back memories of widespread patriotism and rationing during WWII.

About the Author Jean Tennant is the author of several novels, a children's picture book, and hundreds of short stories and newspaper articles. She also teaches writers' workshops throughout the Midwest.
