Miriam Elia : We Learn at Home (Dung Beetle New Words Reading Scheme) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised We Learn at Home (Dung Beetle New Words Reading Scheme):

Some would be offended. I wasn't. Every page in this short and quick read had me either smiling or laughing uncontrollably. Here's an example of one of the pages: We are having a debate. How do you win? asks John. You must tell the other person they are hurting your feelings, says Mummy.

In We Learn at Home, Miriam Elias follow-up to last year's hit We Go to the Gallery, Mummy takes John and Susan out of their local school to be reeducated at home though not before tagging the walls of St. James Primary with the words Fascist Scum. In order to introduce their young minds to a new, alternative worldview, Mummy will ground all learning in a feelings-based outlook, free of any actual facts or skills, and reevaluate core subjects such as mathematics, religion, philosophy and art. John and Susan burn the Union Jack, debate and learn to paint their inner children. Key vocabulary for young readers includes terms such as Marx and Buddha. Pocket-sized, printed in bold colors and written in clear, simple English, the Dung Beetle Learning series pays tribute to and skewers the much-loved British Ladybird early learning children's books of the 1960s, with our child protagonists learning about contemporary art and politics rather than helping their parents around the house. In We Go to the Gallery, Susan found that the decay of Western civilization smells like rubbish, John learned that some toys are only for venture capitalists and the siblings discovered that God is dead. What new lessons will Mummy teach?
