As you go thru the balance of the book, the columns in the original publication grow tiresome and a chore to read in their entirety. I lost interest and did not read them all, farming the book out to a local book share. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Very clever and entertaining, but you have to think ... entertaining, but you have to think back to what was happening in the world 15 to 20 years ago! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. An excellent read By Ruth Edwards Great book... A nostalgic look at the last decade through the eyes of one of America's most lauded humorists, this collection of Art Buchwald's columns covers the events that touched our lives. Charming, hilarious, and keen as ever, Buchwald's satire serves as a reminder that a sense of humor is the key to appreciating the extraordinary times we have lived through.

From Library Journal More humor from Buchwald, whose juicy targets range from Bill Gates to Viagra. Copyright 2002 Reed Business Information, Inc. From Booklist Buchwald is a perennial; he has been a columnist for more than 50 years and a 1982 Pulitzer Prize winner for commentary, whose musings are still featured in more than 500 newspapers. This collection of columns covers the 1990s, full of references to Bill and Hill, downsizing and dot-coms, HMOs and Viagra, and Ken Starr and Monica Lewinsky. Because the book arrives nearly a year after September 11, however, Buchwald has added 18 columns (some serious, but most marked by his trademark wit) from more recent days to the 112 that dissect the earlier period. The title is based on the famous exchange between columnist Mary McGrory and future New York senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan just after John F. Kennedy was assassinated. "We'll never laugh again," McGrory declared. "Mary, we'll laugh again," Moynihan replied, "but we'll never be young again." From one angle, Buchwald's columns are ephemera, poking rather gentle fun at the latest Beltway buzzwords and sacred cows. But that is exactly their value: to remind us of what the talking heads were chattering about 2 or 6 or 10 years ago. Mary Carroll Copyright © American Library Association.
