J. M. Hawes : White Powder, Green Light before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised White Powder, Green Light:

In Soho Paul Salmon, co-producer of the ghastly Britpack Russian Mafia caper Base Metal, is busy chasing his next project and not taking cocaine. In Pontypool, Dr Jane Feverfew is busy wooing her ludicrous students and fighting her leek-carrying ex. In Cardiff, the Welsh cultural mafia are busy planning the disposal of next year's subsidies. Jane can hardly remember what sex is like. Her only excitement in life is a coy e-flirtation @ ResistYoof.co.uk. But the net was made for liars, and the coke-fuelled Salmon mistakes Jane for a writer who might save his bacon - and warm up his bed - and Jane dives happily into the white powder desert of actors, agents and W1 clubs. As the Day of Reckoning arrives for her film and for Soho, Jane comes to her senses too late - or at least too late for salvation to come from any but the most unlikely of quarters-

"The funniest British novelist writing today" * Observer * "He is a poet of despair" * Daily Telegraph * "A novelist of prodigious talent" * Spectator * "Hawes remains a weaver of taut yarns with dialogue that is smart and fast" * Independent on Sunday * "Bang on the money" * Mirror *About the Author James Hawes is the author of five novels, including A White Merc With Fins and Speak for England. He lives in Cardiff.
